Local Photographer Paul Kulik Donates Photos To Support Habitat's 4th Veterans Build

WHAT: Paul Kulik is donating fine giclée prints of his landscape photos to benefit Pikes Peak Habitat for Humanity's (PPHFH) 4th Veterans Build. Framed canvases will be on display and available for purchase Nov. 4 - 18. Unframed canvases will be available for purchase at PPHFH's ReStore Northeast on the evening of Nov. 11 during a Meet & Greet with Paul.

The cost for PPHFH to build houses currently averages $240,000 per house. All proceeds from the sale of Paul's photos will support this cost of the 4th Veterans Build house.

Paul is no longer pursuing the business side of photography and instead prefers to donate the canvases to support Pikes Peak Habitat for Humanity or other charitable organizations. The only way to purchase his work is through this and other exclusive venues. The prices reflect wholesale prices that Paul used to charge galleries, significantly less than a retail markup—a wonderful opportunity for those who wish to own one of Paul's stunning landscapes and support Habitat.

Paul started his photography career as a teen, landing a job for a small 12K circulation town newspaper in Corvallis, Oregon. After receiving his degree in physics, he left the photography world for about 35 years to pursue a career in semiconductor engineering. In the early 2000s, his wife Carol surprised him with a professional digital camera, and Paul's art-photography side business was born.
